Note: Do not forget that you can choose any aspect of the enumerated topics to discuss in your paper. At this point your paper is likely to be an outline with some details rather than a fully elaborated piece of writing. To compose the summary, you will only need the basic idea around which you would like to centre your paper, a one-or-two-paragraph description of how you intend to build it up, and a sentence about what you would like to cover in each point. Do not worry if your summary is a bit shorter or longer than the given word count.
